Religion, Education and the Law

Written by: Dympna Glendenning

Tottel Publishing announce the release of Religion, Education and the Law. This new title considers the basic legal provisions made by six countries to accommodate religion and to facilitate religious freedom, specifically in publicly funded schools. In looking at church-state relationships in general, this essential book examines the character, structure, and degree of separation of church and state in each country, and summarises the provision made in publicly-funded schools for religious education.

Religion, Education and the Law focuses particularly on:

- The jurisprudence of the European Court of Human Rights
- The impact of European Directives on the traditional role of the churches in social policy areas in EU member states
- Comparative analysis of the legal provisions for religious education in Ireland, England, France, Germany, Spain and the United States of America.

Religion, Education and the Law is indispensable for those involved in the education sector, education law or in formulating education policy.
